CATALOG DESCRIPTION:

Are you a content area teacher who is frustrated that your students can't read your assignments? Are you tired of trying to get your content across to students whose reading skills are too weak to acquire this knowledge? Are you frustrated with working with students whose reading levels can span more than twelve years when you are expected to have your entire class complete the required text book? Are you an English/Reading teacher trying to remediate this problem? If you answered yes to any of the questions above, then this course is for you! This class does not have all the answers, but it will provide you with numerous strategies that can help. Learn methods that will teach students to read better in your content area that will carry over into all real world reading so that your students will do better in all of their courses and will be more successful when they go to college.

ED 589 – CONTENT AREA READING: TEACHING STUDENTS IN THE REAL WORLD

STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOMES:

Upon completion of this course the student will be able to:

1. Utilize the seven basic comprehension strategies all good readers use when they read when planning lessons for students.
2. Apply instructional methods to assist students in reading informational text that might be too difficult or boring for them.
3. Analyze the specific skills necessary to read successfully in the teacher's specific content area.
4. Plan lessons that support students in reading in the particular teacher's content area.
